Launched in 1972, the Audemars Piguet Royal Oak was the world's first stainless steel luxury sports watch with a fully integrated bracelet. Designed overnight in response to an urgent request for an 'unprecedented steel watch', it was at the same time the most expensive stainless steel watch ever made.

Advertisement of the Royal Oak Ref. 5402 from 1972. Image: Audemars Piguet Archive

The brand sought famed designer Gerald Genta, who developed a brilliantly engineered, monoblock case, with a distinctively maritime feel, featuring an octagonal bezel secured by eight hexagonal, white gold screws, and a dial with tapisserie motif. While today the Royal Oak is a legend, at the beginning it was more than a bet, it was a true visionary revolution, the first appearance of what is today's most successful kind of wristwatch: the luxury sport watch in steel.

The Royal Oak model reference 5402ST has been produced in four different batches: A, B, C and D with small design details that made each slightly different. The reference 5402 remained in the Audemars Piguet Catalogues for 25 years and was produced in 6,050 examples over the different series.

Rarely has a timepiece had such historical importance, relevance and influence as the Royal Oak. It created a game changing genre and since then there has been a before and after.

Video: <https://youtu.be/h9GQialTLsQ>

The present Royal Oak ref 5402 Series A is the earliest number to ever grace an international auction room as it bears the number 2 making it the second Royal Oak ever made! In fact whereas the A series number 1 was sold in 1974, the present example was sold in May 1972 weeks only after having been presented.

Adding an extra element of historical relevance is the fact that the present watch bearing number 2 was one of the four Royal Oak models presented to the press and public at the opening of the Basel watch fair in 1972.

Considering the skepticism the Royal Oak was met with 50 years ago due to its avant-garde, novel design and philosophy, one can only assume that the buyer was himself a forward thinking, risk taking individual.

The present example is truly a time capsule as since 1972 it has remained totally unworn and comes with its full set of accessories.

Video: <https://youtu.be/TM4FDNr50a8>

The consignor bought a Royal Oak when it was launched and more or less at the same time his brother in law, who was then an Audemars Piguet retailer, offered him this watch as a wedding gift.

Fortunately the consignor put this watch away and wore the other on a daily basis, a watch that 50 years later is still on his wrist.

The lowest numbered reference 5402 A series to ever come to the market, the present watch is unpolished. The dial has started to develop a very pleasant gold copper tone on certain areas giving it even greater panache.

Audemars Piguet, Royal Oak A series "The A2" Ref. 5402ST

It is believed that the reference 5402 A series Number 1 was sold to an "Imperial" family and the whereabouts of the watch are now unknown. However, what is certain is that the Number 1 was worn and the present example is the lowest known number to appear to the market and to the best of our research, the only one that has remained in unworn condition, making this specific timepiece one of the most important examples of one of horology's most iconic timepieces.

To preserve the present watch in its untouched state, we, at Phillips, decided not to open it or give it any service. The watch is truly as it was back in 1972.

We wish to thank the Audemars Piguet team for providing the images featured on the AP

Chronicles website.
