Gübelin Report: Kashmir, no indications of heating

SSEF Report: Kashmir, no indications of heating

The Appendix Letter states that 'The described sapphire is set in a ring in a very simple and classic design flanked by a fine selection of colourless diamonds and exhibits a remarkable size and weight of 11.42ct (declared weight). The sapphire is characterised by a beautifully saturated blue colour and a very fine purity. Its colour is further pronounced by its well-proportioned cutting style, resulting in vivid blue hues due to multiple internal reflection... In addition to these qualities, this sapphire has been spared exposure to heat treatment and its clarity and colour are thus entirely natural'

Ruby and Diamond Earrings

Ruby, the famed regal red gemstone, can command the highest prices of any gemstone. Today, it remains one of the most sought-after coloured gemstones at a time when colour dominates the world of jewels and rarity drives the market. The per-carat prices of fine-quality rubies have been rising consistently, many times breaking auction records.

Believed to hold the power of life, this majestic gem can be traced back to Burma, a source of rubies since 600 AD. Signifying wealth, success and health, rubies have been worn by historic figures throughout history. The gemstone's associations with majestic splendour and its blazing colour: symbolizing that of passion, and of luck in Asia, continues to hold popular to this day.

Colour is the most significant factor affecting a ruby's value. Rubies are made from corundum, a crystalline form of aluminum oxide. The ruby's red colour comes from trace amounts of the element chromium. The finest ruby has a pure, vibrant red to slightly purplish red colour. The colour must be neither too dark nor too light to be considered of finest quality. Historically, the term "pigeon's blood" described the red to slightly purplish or pinkish red colour of rubies with a soft, glowing, red fluorescence.

Less than 10% of all gem-quality rubies are unheated, making them rare and impressive. Unheated rubies are naturally intense and vibrant.

A ruby's value can depend on how visible the inclusions are. Obvious inclusions, or inclusions that reduce transparency or brightness, lower a ruby's value dramatically. However, some inclusions can contribute positively to a gem's appearance. The presence of rutile silk causes light to scatter across facets that might otherwise be too dark. This adds softness to the color and spreads the color more evenly across the ruby's crown.

Rubies from Burma, now Myanmar, are commonly regarded as some of the world's most desirable. Although rubies can be found in various countries, it is the legendary mines of Burma which have yielded the most beautiful gems over the centuries. Historically, rubies would have been mined in the Mogok Valley in the northern part of Burma, which is only two miles long and a half mile wide. Possessing a specific, extremely saturated deep red colour caused by a high chromium content in the ground can look particularly special. Furthermore, rubies from Burma also react to ultraviolet light which creates the effect of making the stone 'come alive' and appear internally illuminated. This is one of the reasons Burmese rubies are so highly valued. Natural "pigeon's blood" rubies sourced from Myanmar, are increasingly rarer and command a significant value.

A ruby's cut refers to how the stone is faceted, its dimensions, and overall symmetry. The true glow of the ruby is only revealed after a quality cut that maximizes light return and color. Fine-quality rubies over one carat are very rare, with the price per carat going up significantly for ruby as it increases in size.

Lot 623, this exceptional pair of "pigeon's blood" rubies boasts impressive weights of 4.03 carats and 4.04 carats respectively and is set with a total of 9.89 carats of brilliant cut diamonds. "Both rubies have been characterized by an outstanding purity and an attractive saturated red colour, a combination rarely encountered in Burmese rubies of this size... the small inclusions found by microscopic inspection represent the hallmarks of rubies from the classical ruby mines in the Mogok Valley in Burma (Myanmar) well known for its wealth in gems since historic times... In addition to these qualities, the described rubies have been spared exposure to heat treatment and their colour and purity are thus entirely natural." SSEF Appendix Letter
